

Impotence Product Found With Undeclared Ingredients

Written by Richard Simmons | Friday, 11 December 2009 | There are 0 comments

The Hong Kong Department of Health has just put out an urgent warning about the product called 2H&2D which is marketed as a treatment for erectile dysfunction. The product which had been sent for testing at the Public Health Laboratory Centre was found to contain an illegally manufactured version of the active ingredient of the impotence drug Cialis.

The Department of Health in Hong Kong has taken its responsibilities regarding the protection of public health from dangerous medication very seriously and has set up a market surveillance unit which randomly selects all types of different so-called traditional medicines and submits them for clinical testing. Over the last five years hundreds of extremely dangerous products have been removed from sale as a result.

In the case of 2H&2D the distributing company, Man Shing International (HK) Ltd was ordered to immediately recall all versions of the product from retail outlets. It is likely however that 2H&2D will still be seen on the black market and on the internet.

Anybody who has used this product should seek medical advice especially if they have been feeling unwell recently. If you have any of this product or know of anybody who does you should make sure that it is destroyed straight away to prevent any adverse health effects.

Because there are so many fake and lethal erectile dysfunction products on the market today the only proper course of action is to stick to the three tried and tested medications namely Viagra, Cialis and Levitra which have been subjected to independent clinical scrutiny over many years and which are not only effective but also safe.

You may think that at Ukmedix News we are overcautious but it is important that you realise that people have died from using these so-called traditional, herbal or natural products and that many more have become seriously ill. It is not worth taking the risk with your health so get a prescription, get a consultation and get the real thing.

http://www.ukmedix.com/cialis/impotence_product_found_with_undeclared_ingredients5114.cfm